

LAMBS LIQUOR TALE TO BE TOLD SHEVLIN

McGraw's Version of Sale of Whiskey Will Be Given Dry Agent To-day.

HAS NOTHING TO CONCEAL

Glants' Manager, Swathed in Bandages, Says He Hates to Act as Informer.

Two men from the office of James Shevlin, prohibition enforcement agent, called yesterday afternoon upon John J. McGraw at his home, 391 West 19th street, in an effort to learn about the source of the liquor which flowed so freely at the somewhat informal party at the Lambs Club ten days ago.

They were admitted to the presence of the manager of the Glants, who was propped in a chair, his head swathed in bandages. August Hausenfeld, counsel of the prohibition enforcement bureau, and Louis Hoffert, an agent, were met by William J. Fallon of the firm of Fallon & McGee of 143 Broadway, and told to make themselves comfortable. City Magistrate Francis X. McQuade also was present.

McGraw said he personally had nothing to say and referred the agents to Mr. Fallon, who told them that Mr. Shevlin preferred to deal directly with Mr. Fallon. When he learned that Mr. Shevlin had returned from Washington, Mr. Fallon said that he would go to his office at 11 o'clock this morning and give him a detailed account of McGraw's version of the liquor deals at the Lambs Club.

"Mr. McGraw does not wish to pose as an informer," said Mr. Fallon. "but he certainly has nothing to conceal from Mr. Shevlin. I shall be glad to lay the whole matter before him."

McGraw took no part in the conference. Afterward he made a brief statement to newspaper men, saying that he had never authorized any lawyer except Mr. Fallon to call upon Mr. Shevlin, and that he was in his hotel and that no other lawyer had been retained by him.

Dr. William F. Bender, to the great relief of McGraw's friends, announced yesterday that he had definitely established the fact that there was no fracture of the skull resulting from McGraw's encounter with William H. Boyd at the Lambs Club. The X-ray photographs taken last Saturday, he said, showed a slight concussion of the brain, which probably will necessitate McGraw's confinement to his room for some time.

Until the condition of John C. Slavin, the comedian, who was injured in front of McGraw's home on the morning of the drinking party, becomes either better or worse, District Attorney Swann has said that he will make no move to obtain an indictment against McGraw. Slavin's condition was reported at St. Louis Hospital last night as unchanged.

The case of L. Ernest Smith, clerk at the Lambs Club, came up yesterday and he pleaded not guilty before Judge James H. Holmes to a charge of removing intoxicating liquors from the club in a taxi. Ralph T. Stanton and Francis X. Goette, counsel for Smith, said he was being made a scapegoat by members of the Lambs Club. Smith was arrested last Wednesday when prohibition enforcement agents saw fifteen cases of liquor being taken from the club. Mr. Stanton said that Smith did not sell liquor to McGraw or to anybody else. The liquor which was seized, he said, was not the property of Smith. He said it belonged to more than one person, though he declined to say who they were.

BAD CHECKS LAID TO BALTIMORE DOCTOR

Complaints of Many Stores Lead to Saunders's Arrest.

Worthless checks in unusual numbers have been passing over the counters of New York department stores during the last two weeks. Last night Detective Quinn of the West Thirtieth street station arrested Dr. Lee Baylies Saunders, who said he was a physician formerly on the staff of the Maryland General Hospital in Baltimore, on a grand larceny charge brought by Best & Co.

Dr. Saunders was arrested yesterday afternoon in Macy's, where, according to police, he presented a $20 check on the Pacific Bank. Inquiry developed that he had no account at the Pacific Bank. Detectives found in one of his pockets a check for $49.50 made out to McCrory's.

The charges against him allege that he passed two worthless checks at Best & Co. on August 18. The police have been looking for him since August 3, when he is alleged to have presented a $45 check at Brill Brothers' Forty-third street store. He is wanted in Baltimore on the same charge. The Maryland General Hospital's funds. According to the detectives, Dr. Saunders declared last night he was glad to be arrested. "I hope I can find some in jail," he said. John H. Delaney, Transit Construction Commissioner, was suggested by Mayor Hylan as a mediator, is striving to achieve the same result, but no arrangements were made yesterday because Mr. Garrison was away. The situation will remain dormant, it was said, until the expiration of present working agreements on August 28, and probably longer in view of provisions therein providing for thirty days notice of intention to strike.

BROKERS HERE DENY LIBERTY BOND THEFT

Mystery in Reported Disappearance of $700,000.

No confirmation could be found here yesterday of the reports from Milwaukee and Chicago that $700,000 worth of bonds and securities delivered to the post office registered matter for the former city have been lost or stolen en route to New York. At the same time Chicago news sources added to the mystery by reporting that a private detective agency was sending an alarm throughout the country for the missing property. Chicago explained, too, that the bonds and securities were not insured.

According to the story as it was related in dispatches from Chicago and Milwaukee Tuesday night, the loss consisted of $500,000 worth of Victory notes and railroad securities worth about $200,000 per. According to the same news sources the consignor was the Milwaukee branch of the New York stock brokerage firm of Paine, Webber & Co., and the two bundles into which the paper had been packed were addressed to the New York office of the company.

Paine, Webber & Co. denied yesterday that they knew anything about the loss of any Victory bonds. A representative of the firm said the Victory bonds mentioned in the newspapers were not owned by his employers. He said the railroad securities were mailed by the Milwaukee representative of the firm on July 29 and that nothing has been heard of them since. Their market value was about $100,000, he said.

The Bronx, deposited the money, a roll of marked bills, behind a hedge. Dr. Rottenberg went away. Within a few minutes a young man walked behind the hedge and picked up the money. The prisoner was taken to Police Headquarters, where he said he was Louis Linder, 28 years old, a graduate of New York University, living at 42 West 117th street. He worked as a salesman at $18 a week.

The detectives charged him with sending letters also to Morris Wildener, a shoe manufacturer, of 37 avenue B, and B. X. Dawson, a broker, of 501 West 117th street. Dr. Rottenberg had attended his mother and a co-bedfellow while she was ill, the police said Linder explained.

3 WINE PIRATES DIVE UNDER FIRE

Leap From Launch Near Half Million Dollar Store When Watchmen Shoot.

WOUNDED MAN ARRESTED

Empty Craft Floats Away and Police Believe Two Are Drowned.

As a watchman on a pier at the foot of West Forty-sixth street, where stood half a million dollars worth of wines, was nearing the end of his vigil an hour before dawn yesterday he heard the muffled exhaust of a motor boat, and though it seemed near he could discern no lights. So he sat down to ponder this and for the sake of precaution drew his revolver and rested it on his knees.

As the minutes passed the sound grew louder but still nothing appeared, and the watchman began to wonder if his imagination had gone awry from the loneliness of the night, when suddenly the forms of three men rose like phantoms from the darkness. The watchman, his nerves at the snapping tension, fired instantly, then again and again until five shots were spent.

All that answered him was the sound of two solid splashes as two men dived into the water. Thereafter the customary silence settled down again. The watchman ran to the end of the pier and saw an empty launch drifting slowly down stream with the tide. With a searchlight he scanned the waters and searched the dock, but the three figures had gone as mysteriously as they appeared.

The watchman, who was Patrick McGuire, hired by the Oriental Steamship Company to guard the large liquor consignment, telephoned the police. Some time later a man appeared at Roosevelt Hospital and asked to have a bullet wound treated. He said he had been the innocent bystander at an Italian rummage at Amsterdam avenue and 129th street. The physicians were surprised to find that there was no bullet hole in the man's clothing and they informed the police.

Detective Daly of the West Forty-seventh street station investigated and after reporting that he had visited the wounded man's house and there found wet clothing hung up to dry placed him under arrest. The prisoner said he was Timothy Sullivan, 27, of 612 West Forty-ninth street, but he denied any knowledge of the strange occurrence at the pier. Detective Daly, however, said that inquiring disclosed the fact that there had been no shooting at Amsterdam avenue and 129th street.

No trace of the two men who vanished in the river was discovered, nor were the police able to find the launch which the two men had dived from, for the watchman believed they were wounded. According to the waterfront police they have been warned that "river pirates" are making night raids on piers.

RAIN CLOSES BROAD STREET GOLD "MINE"

Operations, However, Will Be Resumed To-day.

Tuesday night's rainstorm halted gold digging operations in the excavation for a cellar at 43 Broad street, where on Tuesday a construction engineer found in quicksand overlying blue clay a few flakes of yellow mineral which he thinks is the precious metal.

The engineer went again to the hole yesterday morning with the hope of finding more particles and subjecting them to a chemical test. But the trenches of the excavation were flooded with two feet of water and surface mud and nothing could be done until the pump had worked at least a day. The engineer will try again this morning.

Many persons who had seen in this newspaper's account of the discovery of gold at the excavation yesterday. Curb brokers, before the market opened, hung over the fence and gazed hungrily at the chance of much. Old timers swapped stories of all sorts of queer finds in Manhattan earth, but none of them recalled any discovery of gold that turned out to be the real thing.

WOMAN'S TORSO FOUND IN RIVER

Head, Legs and Arms Cut Off, Leaving No Marks of Identification.

LIKE HANS SCHMIDT CASE

Bit of Twine and Pieces of Red Flannel Only Clues to Mystery.

A murder mystery resembling in its aspects the Hans Schmidt-Anna Mueller case engaged the attention of the police yesterday on both sides of the Hudson River. The torso of a woman, probably under 30 years of age, was found floating in the water off Pier 5, Communipaw. The arms, legs and head had been cut off close to the trunk with a fine tooth saw, according to Dr. Arthur Haskings, Assistant Physician of Hudson county. He will perform an autopsy to-day.

The torso was absolutely no mark of identification on the body. The only clue the police have is a bit of twine that was tied around it and a few pieces of red flannel, probably shreds of the cloth in which it was wrapped. The body had been in the water from five to six weeks, Dr. Haskings said, and may have floated a considerable distance.

After the torso had been examined by the police and medical authorities, it was taken to Pryor's morgue, Jersey City. The woman was about 5 feet 4 inches tall and weighed about 130 pounds, Dr. Haskings said. The amputations were crude and gave no appearance of surgical knowledge.

The murder of Anna Mueller, for which Hans Schmidt paid the penalty in the electric chair in February, 1916, was solved through the identification of an embroidered pillowcase in which part of the woman's body was found. Schmidt cut his victim into nine parts, which he threw one by one into the Hudson River from the Fort Lee ferry. The trunk was washed ashore in Hoboken. Other parts were discovered floating in the bay: one leg floated up on the beach at Kenilworth, N. J., inside Sandy Hook. Schmidt in his confession said St. Elizabeth, his patron saint, had instructed him to "make the sacrifice."

Jersey City police said last night there is no woman missing on record there who answers the description Dr. Haskings drew of the murdered woman. They have asked the New York police to check up the list of missing persons reported in New York.

A theory that the woman may have been poisoned will be tested to-day when Dr. Haskings examines the contents of the stomach. Another theory the police suggest is that the woman was shot through the head and her murderer cut off the head to prevent identification. There were no wounds on the body.
